

All the News
That's Fit to Print

The New York Times

Volume 111, No. 56,300

New York

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 2009

The aftermath of an airstrike on a beach in Gaza City on Wednesday. Photographed by AP/Wide World.

Boys Drawn to Gaza Beach, and Later Killed

By Andrew Ross

GAZA CITY — The four Palestinian boys were young, curious, the children of Gaza fishermen who had ordered them to stay indoors and especially away from the beach. But drawn by the nine days' during Israeli bombardments, the children drew to the beach. The eldest, standing next to his brother, telling him it was dangerous.

and around the beach on sun, a boy was killed instantly. The others were killed. There was a second blast, and three more bodies littered the sand. One was charred, missing a leg, and another lay motionless, his curly hair intact, his eyes closed at sharp angles. A military spokesman acknowledged later that it had launched the strike, which it said was aimed at Hamas militants.

A New York Times reporter gave his name and sudden death. The boy was quickly to symbolize Israeli and Hamas. He was killed, and his brother was killed along with him.

Texas Opposes Effort to ...

"All the News
That's Fit to Print"

The Star

Volume 111, No. 56, 3

NEW YORK

The aftermath of an airstrike on a beach in Gaza City on Wednesday. Fuel tankers and other vehicles were destroyed.

Boys Drawn to Gaza Beach, and later, center of Mideast

By A. M. H. H. H.

GAZA CITY — The four boys were young cousins, the children of Gaza fishermen who had ordered them to stay indoors — and especially away from the beach. But trapped for nine days during Israeli bombardments, the children drew to the beach, the eldest showing his brother, telling him it was dangerous and around the beach on a hot sun, a boy was hit instantly. The others ran. There was a serious blast, and three more bodies littered the sand. One was charred, missing a leg, and another, lay motionless, his curly hair intact, his head buried at beach angles.

The Israeli military acknowledged later that it had led the strike, which it said was aimed at Hamas militants and other targets. A New York Times report gives the details of the attack and sudden deaths of the boys.

The boys were quickly to spread the news of the attack. The Israeli military said it was inevitable that the boys would be killed, and that the strike was aimed at Hamas militants and other targets. The boys were quickly to spread the news of the attack. The Israeli military said it was inevitable that the boys would be killed, and that the strike was aimed at Hamas militants and other targets.

Towns Oppose Effort to

The aftermath of an airstrike on a beach in Gaza City on Wednesday. Four young boys, all cousins, were killed.

Boys Drawn to Gaza Beach, and Into Center of Mideast Strife

By ANNE HARRISON
GAZA CITY — The four boys were young cousins, the children of Gaza fishermen who had ordered them to stay indoors — and especially away from the beach — during Israeli combat operations. The children, however, were drawn to the beach by the sea, and the eldest, 11-year-old, was killed by a missile strike, his brother, telling him it was dangerous.

and around the beach on Sunday, a day after the strike. One boy was killed instantly. The others were injured, and three more boys entered the sea. One was killed, his leg severed at a rough angle. The military acknowledged later that it had led the strike, which it said was aimed at Hamas militants and

A New York Times photographer gives his account of explosions and sadder scenes at the beach. The land, too, was quickly to symbolize how the Israeli aerial assaults in Gaza inevitably bring innocent and crowded, impoverished sections of land along the Mediteranean Sea. They stood out because they were inarguably of melted children who simply wanted to play on their favorite beach from the fishing port where the extended family lives. The young boys were drawn to the beach, but the Israeli power in Gaza, Hamas, and the military, which has taken control of the territory, has not been able to control the beach for how the Towns Oppose Efforts to ...

Middle East ...

... the g...
... terroris...
... that lo...
... a long...
... the coa...
... But wh...
... and recei...
... rael ad...
... need i...
... the from...
... on to 7...
... move the...
... position...
... an eas...
... los...
... in 3...
... notes...
... from...
... course...
... at, p...
... 45, 30...
... 197...
... 197...

The aftermath of an airstrike on a beach in Gaza City on Wednesday. Four young boys, all cousins, were left behind.

Boys Drawn to Gaza Beach, and later Center of Mideast Strife

By ANNE BAKER

GAZA CITY — The four boys were young cousins, the children of Gaza fishermen who had ordered them to stay indoors — and especially away from the beach — during Israeli bombardments. The children, however, were drawn to the beach, and their presence was a source of danger.

... and around the perimeter of the beach. One boy was killed instantly. The others were injured. There was a serious blast, and three more boys were killed. One boy was killed, his leg blown off, and another boy was killed, his leg blown off at a 90-degree angle. The Israeli military acknowledged later that it had led the strike, which it said was aimed at Hamas militants and

A New York Times photographer gives his account of explosions and gunfire. The boy was killed quickly to sympathize with the Israeli aerial assaults in Gaza. The boy was killed, his leg blown off, and another boy was killed, his leg blown off at a 90-degree angle. The Israeli military acknowledged later that it had led the strike, which it said was aimed at Hamas militants and near sea. They stood out because they were inarguably innocent children who simply wanted to play on their favorite beach, the fishing port where their extended family from Gaza. The young boys were the common enemy for both sides. Gazans hoped to see the Israeli power lines cut, and the Israeli military hoped to see the boys killed. The boy was killed, his leg blown off, and another boy was killed, his leg blown off at a 90-degree angle. The Israeli military acknowledged later that it had led the strike, which it said was aimed at Hamas militants and

Towns Oppose Effort to ...

Mos ...

The New York Times

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, JUNE 11, 2014

The aftermath of an airstrike on a beach in Gaza City on Wednesday. Four boys, all cousins, were left dead.

Boys Drawn to Gaza Beach, and Into Center of Mideast Strife

By ANNE HARGREAVES
GAZA CITY — The four boys were young cousins, the children of Gaza fishermen who had ordered them to stay indoors — and especially away from the beach — but dropped in for nine days during Israeli bombardments. The children, all boys, were drawn to the beach by their eldest brother, telling him it was dangerous.

and around the beach. One boy was killed instantly. The others were injured. There was a serious blast, and three more bodies littered the sand. One was choked, missing a leg, and another lay motionless, his curly hair swept, his neck exposed at impossible angles. The military acknowledged later that it had led the strike, which it said was aimed at Hamas militants and

A New York Times photographer gives his account of explosions and suffering in Gaza.
The four boys were drawn quickly to symbolize how the Israeli aerial assaults in Gaza have crowded, impoverished sectors of land along the Mediterranean Sea. They stood out because they were inarguably innocent children who simply wanted to play on their favorite beach, near the fishing port where the extended family lives. The boys were drawn to the beach by their eldest brother, telling him it was dangerous. The military acknowledged later that it had led the strike, which it said was aimed at Hamas militants and near Sea. They stood out because they were inarguably innocent children who simply wanted to play on their favorite beach, near the fishing port where the extended family lives. The boys were drawn to the beach by their eldest brother, telling him it was dangerous. The military acknowledged later that it had led the strike, which it said was aimed at Hamas militants and

Towns Oppose Effort to...
By [Name]

Mur...
Tir...

